Errors of Speech in Common Use. Editors of the Wheeling Register: In a late issue of your paper I saw an attempt by some would be purist to correct two seeming errors in a dialogue he overheard on the street. The dialogue was in substance as follows : "Won't you please open my umbrella for me?" asks a lady of a gentleman.

"Certainly"; and it was opened.
"Thank you," said the lady.
"Not at all," was the reply.
The critic maintains that in this short solilequy were committed two gross errorsone by the lady, who asks, he says, for what she does not want; and the second by the tive and lower. States quiet. gentleman, who flatly contradicts the lady, implying by his answer that she does not change arm at 486%. Gold, 111320112. Governthank him; which, if true, would be an un- ments active and steady. States quiet and nominal pardonable bit of rudeness. But permit me except for Tennessee's, which are better. to say that the criticism is utterly uncalled racy or of politeness can be made. In the asset of the lady there is used a form of preferring a request sanctioned by the best authorities. Little, indeed, must the professor I think the critic had that awful title pre faced to his name) have read, or much must be have read to little purpose, if he condemn ber innocent phrase, "Will you not please raise my umbrella?" It is as different from Will you please not raise my umbrella?" as it is possible to imagine any two sentences to be. Taken in its strictest sense, the lady only delicately and gracefully in-inuates that the gentleman's gallantry forbids his soft accommodating her; and her mode of request is therefore correct in grammar, sense, and etiquette. With regard to the gentleman's seeming. rudeness, it vanishes when we supply the obvious ellipses in his answer. The lady thanks him; and he, as any true gentleman is bound to do, simply informs her, in correct and concise phrase, "Thanks are not at all preessary for so trifling a service." D. Loretto, Pa., January 5, 1875.

He might even be trusted to walk through a church-yard at midnight alone, and not run for fear of "spooks." He alone, and not run for fear of "spooks." He must undoubtedly be a brave man-for have we not his own word for it? Wise, too, as well as brave. He certifies to his own coure, and the President and his Cabinet youch for his "wisdom."
